Cattle

In today's economy the overall theme of "Less is More" has traveled beyond simple personal possessions and transcended into the world of agriculture and raising cattle. This is being realized all over the U.S. with a small, lesser known breed of old heritage Irish cattle. Dexters are not a man made miniaturized breed but are the smallest true breed of cattle. Though some keep Dexters as pets because of their cute compact, easy to manage size and personality, Dexter Cattle bring a lot to the commercial and homesteading industries with their superior beef and high butterfat milk. Because of their small size, heritage genetics and hardiness, dollar for dollar Dexters bring more beef or milk to the table than any other breed. They are economical to raise due to their smaller appetites and admirable feed to beef/milk ratio and need less land to thrive than more well known larger breeds.

But the dinner table is not the only place these little cattle are hitting the big time. Show rings across the country are seeing more and more Dexter enthusiasts - some shows have added a Dexter Cattle Show to their venue such as the world famous, Houston Livestock Show, and Rodeo, several State, County and local Fairs as well as Junior specific shows are adding Dexters to their crowd pleasing schedules.

Dexters are an ideal breed for young and old alike with very trainable attitudes and easier to manage size with mature cows ranging from 36" - 42" and bulls just a little larger.

Come meet some Dexter Cattle and Dexter Cattle Breeders - fun and educational for all ages!
