Fort Campbell Streams Receive Second Of Three TWRA Summer Trout Stockings

NASHVILLE --- The Tennessee Wildlife Resources Agency has released about 900 rainbow trout into several streams that run near and through Fort Campbell, which straddle the Kentucky and Tennessee state lines.

TWRA, along with the Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources, have been stocking this area for many years, with Kentucky releasing trout in the spring and TWRA letting them go in the summer months.

"We made our first stocking of the year a few days ago, and we have one more to go," said Jim Pipas, a biologist for the TWRA. "We will stock trout again in mid-August."

Trout released by TWRA ranged in size from 8 to 10 inches long. Locations of the release areas were Boiling Springs Road Bridge (the first bridge north of Pump-House Road), Mabry Road Culvert Bridge, Kinser Pond; Service Road Bridge, and 101st Airborne Road Bridge.

To learn more about fishing on the military base, including what licenses or permits are needed and where stocking sites are located, contact Fort Campbell Outdoor Recreation at (270) 798-2175.

94 Acres of Milo Planted at Old Hickory WMA

NASHVILLE --- The Tennessee Wildlife Resources Agency is continuing to update waterfowl hunters on its annual planting of crops for wildlife which was delayed this year due to the May flooding.

One of the popular waterfowl areas in Middle Tennessee is the Old Hickory Wildlife Management Area, located near Gallatin and Lebanon. TWRA managed to plant 94 acres of milo by the end of June in the low-lying fields at the unit.

Provided that there are no more downpours as the historic May rain, Old Hickory WMA is expected to have good crops, according to TWRA officials. The Old Hickory WMA staff is continuing to work on the area's roads and getting the pumping sites ready.

More information concerning Tennessee's wildlife management areas, including Cheatham and Haynes Bottom WMAs in Middle Tennessee, can be found by visiting tennesseeanyttime.org.

Waterfowl blind drawings will be held across Tennessee on Saturday, Aug. 7.
