Encourage Those Who Have Encouraged You

As I prepared to begin writing today I spent a few moments alone with the Lord in my living room. I acknowledged Him as my Savior and the Creator of the world. I thanked Him for giving me another day of life and prayed that I would not waste it. I asked God to forgive me of any thoughts or actions that stand between us and sought His guidance for the content of today's Good News article.

with issues in life and in need of encouragement, or who God speaks to through this small publication. I only know that He has given me the absolute privilege of telling others who He is and how He has changed my life. After hitting the "send" button each week, all I can do is trust that God will place those words in the hands of someone who needs to hear them..... and then pray that they will listen!

There are many weeks that we receive no response to the message that God places on our hearts. We have also discovered that inviting others to share their own testimonies of faith in this context has been a futile effort to say the least. Yes, we get discouraged from time to time and we sometimes wonder if it's worth the effort.

Then, when we are least expecting it, we receive an email from someone that God has spoken to through an article, or a phone call from someone like our friend Connie who was convicted by an article and subsequently accepted Christ while we were on the phone. It is in those days that God reminds us that He IS still in the business of changing lives and that He IS using our lives to accomplish a small part of His perfect plan.

I am confident that there are many followers of Christ reading today with a burden to make a difference for Jesus but not actually seeing the fruits of their labor; folks that have been praying for a lost loved one, a family member with an illness or a relationship that seems to be failing. I'm sure there are Sunday school teachers, choir members, faithful prayer warriors and even pastors who get discouraged from time to time and desire to see the hand of God working in their lives. I'd say each of us have neighbors, friends, family or co-workers that have invested in our lives and we have never stopped long enough to let them know how much it really meant to us.

I can attest to how much Blondie and I appreciate the kind words of encouragement that we sometimes receive from others and I can assure you that it always motivates us to say and do more for Christ when we see the results of God working through our lives.

For me it is folks like my dad (Steve Vittatoo), Pastor Mark Caldwell, David Choate, Pastor Darren Hales, Willie Morris, Scott Parmer, Carl McPeak and other men of God that have prayed with and for me, encouraged me as a disciple maker and invested their time, talents and treasures to help prepare me for the ministry God has given Angie and me. So often we get busy "doing life" and forget to acknowledge the impact their sacrifices have made on us. Yes, God is the One responsible for the changes in my life, but he used these men to accomplish it and therefore they deserve my gratitude and humble appreciation. So please allow me to publically say; "Thank you, men of God, for investing in me!"

Now, who is it that you need to reach out to? Who is it that has made an impact on your life? Who is it that God has used to reveal Himself to you? You cannot imagine how much it would mean to them to hear you acknowledge it and simply say, "Thank you". As Christians we are not promised the luxury of always seeing the fruits of our labor, but it sure is nice when we do! Let's all try to encourage someone today and let God use our attitudes and words to reveal His love to others.

Hebrews 10:24-25 (NKJV) And let us consider one another in order to stir up love and good works, not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as is the manner of some, but exhorting one another, and so much the more as you see the Day approaching.

Four MS-13 Leaders Sentenced Serious Threat Removed from Atlanta Streets

For nearly four years, four leaders of various Mara Salvatrucha, or MS-13, factions operating in the Atlanta metro area terrorized the community through their flagrant disregard for life—conspiring to commit senseless acts of murder, attempted murder, and armed robbery.

But a multi-year, multi-agency law enforcement effort recently took down this criminal enterprise, eradicating a deadly threat from the streets of Atlanta. Ernesto Escobar, Miguel Alvarado-Linares, and Dimas Alfaro-Granados will be spending the rest of their lives in prison, while Jairo Reyna-Ozuna will be behind bars for more than a decade.

The MS-13 gang is composed primarily of immigrants and/or their descendants from El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras. In the U.S., this extremely violent criminal organization got its start in Los Angeles and then spread out to a number of states around the country, including Georgia.

In Atlanta, as in other areas, members are usually organized into groups called “cliques” that operate under the larger MS-13 umbrella. Each clique has a leader who conducts regular meetings to plan and discuss crimes against rival gangs. In this case, we saw clique leaders reporting back to MS-13 leaders in their home countries about MS-13 activities in the Atlanta area.

The four defendants in this case, who reportedly lived by the credo “rape, kill, control,” perpetrated their crimes for seemingly minor reasons—to enhance their reputations among fellow gang members, to protect their turf from rival gangs, or to exact revenge for a real or perceived slight. The robberies were usually committed to obtain funding to support the criminal enterprise, providing money and weapons to gang members—including incarcerated individuals in the U.S and elsewhere.

Some of the heinous crimes the defendants were charged with included:

Murdering a fellow MS-13 member who was thought to be cooperating with police;

Ordering an MS-13 member who wanted to leave the gang to first commit an act of violence, leading the departing member to shoot into a car believed to be carrying rival gang members—killing the passenger and wounding the driver;

Returning to a nightclub following a fight with a suspected rival gang member and fatally shooting a man walking through the club’s parking lot;

Going back to a gas station after a scuffle with two teenagers who worked there and fatally shooting one of them as he painted lines in the parking lot;

Murdering a 15-year-old boy—a suspected 18th Street gang member—with a shotgun.

The case was investigated by the Atlanta Safe Streets Task Force, made up of investigators from local, state, and federal agencies, including the FBI. Another key partner was the U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement’s Homeland Security Investigations Directorate.

Federal participation in this case allowed a number of effective tools to be brought to the table—perhaps most importantly the RICO (Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations) and the VICAR (Violent Crimes in Aid of Racketeering) statutes with their tougher penalties. Investigators also made use of physical and court-authorized electronic surveillances and confidential informants.

The charges against the four subjects in this case were part of a broader multi-agency investigation of MS-13 in Atlanta, concluded in 2010, which resulted in arrests of, charges against, and/or deportation of 75 members.

Proof positive that dedicated, cooperative efforts among law enforcement agencies can and do win out over dangerous criminal conspiracies.
