Progress Report Panel Conducts Review of FBI Since 9/11 Commission Report

A congressionally mandated panel charged with reviewing the FBI's implementation of recommendations contained in the 9/11 Commission Report in 2004 today issued its findings.

The release of the 9/11 Review Commission's report, The FBI: Protecting the Homeland in the 21st Century, followed 14 months of research, interviews, briefings, and field visits by commissioners and their 13-member staff. The commission—which included former Attorney General Edwin Meese, former Congressman Tim Roemer, and Georgetown University professor Bruce Hoffman—began its review in 2013 at the FBI's request after Congress called for an appraisal of the Bureau's progress

TWENTY-TWO INDIVIDUALS FROM NINE COUNTIES AND THREE STATES ARRESTED FOR CONSPIRACY TO DISTRIBUTE METHAMPHETAMINE AND FIREARMS RELATED CHARGES

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. — On Mar. 25, 2015, 22 individuals from over nine counties, spanning southeast Tennessee, northern Georgia, and northern Alabama, were arrested for their roles in a large methamphetamine distribution conspiracy centered in Marion County, Tenn.

An investigation led by special agents and task force officers of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms, and Explosives (ATF) along with detectives of the Marion County Tennessee Sheriff's Office, resulted in two separate grand jury indictments, which include charges of conspiracy to distribute methamphetamine, distribution of methamphetamine, possession with intent to distribute methamphetamine, and possession of a firearm since the 9/11 Commission issued its recommendations in 2004. A classified draft of the Review Commission's report was sent to Congress and to other agencies mentioned in the report; the FBI released the unclassified version for the public.

That report, which can be found on FBI.gov, concludes that the FBI has "transformed itself over the last 10 years" and "made measurable progress building a threat-based, intelligence-driven national security organization." The commission also makes recommendations on where the FBI can improve.

In a press briefing today at FBI Headquarters, Director James B. Comey was joined by the report's commissioners to discuss the findings.

"This has been a tremendously valuable thing to me as a new Director," Comey told reporters. "My take, I can divide it into three buckets: Overwhelmingly, I agree with their findings and their recommendations; there's a small group that I need to study to understand better what it might mean for us; and then there's a very small group where I respectfully have a different view."

The Director said the report provides an effective roadmap to keeping the FBI a premiere law enforcement and intelligence organization. "I think being world-class means knowing you are good but never being satisfied that you are good enough," he said. "I believe the FBI is world-class. [The report] shows us ways that we can be better."

The report's key findings center on the Bureau's transformation since the attacks in 2001. Commissioners focused on elements of how the FBI has adapted over more than a decade, such as the creation of a cadre of skilled intelligence analysts to analyze threats, the retention of good leadership, and the development of cyber capabilities to thwart agile hackers and online threats.

"This has been a major transformation of the FBI in which the intelligence function—which as the Director said has always been there—has been expanded and brought up to date in terms of the threat in a way which was almost exponential," said Commissioner Edwin Meese. "Some things are necessary, we feel, that will keep pace with the accelerating threat we find around the world."

The commissioners issued 12 findings, along with recommendations. Topics include information-sharing, cyber security, technology, the Bureau's legal attaché program, and the FBI's role in counter-ing violent extremism.

"During the decade and a half after 9/11, the FBI has changed," said Commissioner Roemer. "It is currently changing, but must urgently and boldly accelerate this change. What we've laid out, I hope, is a blueprint for the FBI over the next quarter-century. Over the course of this next century, hundreds of Americans' lives will depend on it."
