Jubilee! A tribute to Guy and Candie Carawan is set for April 10

TAMIS and the East Tennessee Historical Society to honor the Carawans

Guy and Candie Carawan marched with Martin Luther King through the streets of Selma. They stood with coal miners whose faces bore the pallor of lives lived mostly without sun. They sang songs of freedom, hope, and protest wherever they found themselves, and their music gave courage to Americans fighting for life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Knox County Public Library's Tennessee Archive of Moving Image and Sound proudly presents Jubilee! A tribute to Guy and Candie Carawan on Friday, April 10, at 5:30 pm at the East Tennessee History Center at 601 South Gay Street. Admission

Haslam Announces Federal Disaster Assistance For 35 Counties

Response to worst ice storm in two decades

NASHVILLE – Tennessee Gov. Bill Haslam announced today the federal government will provide assistance to 35 counties still recovering from the severe winter storm of February 15 to February 22, 2015, that took 30 lives and caused widespread damage.

“This deadly and devastating storm required a comprehensive and coordinated response from many, and this federal assistance will hopefully provide some relief to these counties that are trying to recover and rebuild,” Haslam said.

The following counties are included in the declaration: Anderson, Bedford, Bledsoe, Blount, Campbell, Clay, Coffee, Cumberland, is free.

Jubilee

Guy Carawan came to Tennessee in 1959 to become music director for the Highlander Folk School, then located in Monteagle, TN. Shortly after arriving, he introduced a song called "We Shall Overcome" to a group of college students. The song became the anthem of the Civil Rights movement.

At another Highlander workshop, he met and married Candie Anderson who was an exchange student at Fisk University in Nashville. The early years of their marriage were spent on the front lines of the Civil Rights movement and documenting the culture of the people who lived on Johns Island, off the coast of South Carolina.

In the 1970s, the Highlander Center relocated to New Market and turned its attention to the issues facing Appalachia. The Carawans moved to New Market as well, raising a family, conducting workshops, playing at festivals, and preserving the music and culture of the region. Through it all they maintained a performance schedule that took them around the world.

Jubilee! schedule of events:

5:30 pm: Museum of East Tennessee History opens free to the public

6:00 pm: Photography exhibit: "The People of Johns Island, South Carolina" features the works of Robert Yellin. Yellin's work captures an African-American community that comes alive through photographs from the 1966 book Ain't You Got a Right to the Tree of Life? by Guy and Candie Carawan.

7:00 pm: Live Music in the Carawan Tradition

Freedom songs, Appalachian, and gospel music performed by Carawan family and friends including The Carpetbag Singers, Evan Carawan and the Celtic Collaborators, Nancy Brennan Strange, Dan Gammon, Steve Horton, and George Reynolds.

8:00 pm: Video treasures from the vaults:

The Telling Takes Me Home (2005): A special 10th anniversary screening of Heather Carawan's moving documentary that integrates her own reflections on growing up in a rich musical and political landscape with her parents' views on race relations, community organizing, and the sustaining power of song.

Carawan Lost and Found:

A selection of rare footage from the Tennessee Archive of Moving Image & Sound archives, including clips from an obscure 1965 CBS documentary entitled John's Island, forgotten live performances, and never-before-seen raw footage from the WBIR-TV Heartland Series!

for costs related to debris removal, emergency protective measures, and rebuilding and repairing roads, bridges, water control facilities, buildings, utilities and recreational facilities.

The severe winter weather event began in West Tennessee in the early morning of February 15, with record snow and sleet accumulations and then lesser amounts of ice and freezing rain. The winter storm continued in multiple waves, with sleet, snow, freezing rain, and dangerously cold temperatures and wind chills throughout each region of Tennessee before ending on February 22.

For only the seventh time in the Tennessee Emergency Management Agency's history, the State Emergency Operations Center activated to a Level II-state of emergency as the storm progressed. Emergency Services Coordinators and TEMA staff maintained operations at the SEOC on a 24-hour basis through the duration of the emergency.

The National Weather Service characterized the event as one of the worst ice storms to hit Tennessee in two decades and temperatures reached record lows in many parts of the state. Of the 30 reported weather-related fatalities, more than half were due to hypothermia.

At the onset of the storm the American Red Cross placed 19 shelters on standby, primarily along interstates in counties hit hardest from the winter storm. The Red Cross and many private organization activated shelters in Blount, Campbell, Coffee, Davidson, Dyer, Fentress, Grainger, Grundy, Hamblen, Knox, Marshall, McMinn, Monroe, Montgomery, Overton, Putnam, Roane, and White counties. At peak, there were more than 290 shelter occupants reported.

Power outages peaked at 67,000 people on February 16, and more than 32,000 people were still without power on February 22. The lack of power forced businesses, universities, K-12 schools and daycares to close, disrupting communities
