Police Officers Protect and Serve our communities

Residents of the United States of America enjoy a security system like no other country in the world. This system is based upon being able to call the police whenever we need them. Help or protection is never too far away. We know that they will come, regardless of the circumstances or potential danger involved.

We go to sleep every night, secure in the knowledge we will be protected from harm. Also, unlike many countries in the world, we are confident that the police will not come into our homes and take us away without due process of law. As their badges say, they are here to "serve and protect." They serve regardless of the risk Anabolic steroids, according to the National Institute on Drug Abuse, are the common name for synthetic variants of the male sex hormone testosterone. While these drugs are legally prescribed to treat certain medical conditions, they are also abused by some athletes, body builders, and others in attempts to enhance performance.

Because of their potential for abuse and the possibility of them causing serious health problems if misused, anabolic steroids have also been classified as a Schedule III drug under the federal Controlled Substances Act, which regulates the manufacture, possession, distribution, and use of certain substances. Recently, after a joint FBI/U.S. Postal Inspection Service (USPIS) investigation, a 43-year-old Virginia man, who had no license to distribute anabolic steroids and no prescription for the drug, pled guilty in federal court to his role in a steroid distribution conspiracy. This past July, that individual—Carl Macchiarulo—was sentenced to serve four years in prison.

During the investigation, FBI and USPIIS investigators were assisted by the Drug Enforcement Administration and U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP).

Between December 2012 and September 2014, Macchiarulo owned and operated an illegal anabolic steroid business known as CK Labs out of the Midlothian home he shared with his wife and children. The lab was located in a room that only he had access to.

Not licensed to run a lab, Macchiarulo was also not a medical professional nor a chemistry expert. But despite all that, he purchased—from suppliers in China, Europe, and elsewhere—various raw anabolic steroid powders and pills to manufacture them into finished products and sell them.

Using phony names, Macchiarulo usually e-mailed his orders to his overseas suppliers and sent payments through money transfer services, keeping individual payments low so he wouldn't have to show identification. And he had his purchases sent either to his residence or to post office boxes opened under fictitious business names.

To avoid detection by CBP officials, suppliers usually sent their products to Macchiarulo in decoy packaging—looking like food or beverage products, toys, etc.

Once Macchiarulo received the steroids, he manufactured the raw products into a finished product for distribution under the CK Labs name. He even had his own logo—a bulldog. To market his merchandise, he bought ads and promoted his fake company—and its very real product—on websites known for advertising anabolic steroids.

Customers from more than 30 states contacted Macchiarulo (see Steroids ctd. pg. 7) of potential harm to themselves. They have sworn to uphold the law. Their families and friends worry more about them than the officers do themselves. They are proud to serve and never hesitate to answer a call. That is their job, their duty, and truly their calling in life.

Officers, like so many others, are often called upon to react at a moment's notice and exhibit the courage and the fortitude to respond to the situation. They do this without thought, hesitation or reservation. Many times they are heroes in everyday situations that are unknown to the public or even their own families. This lack of publicity makes these acts no less courageous.

Unfortunately, a few officers choose to violate the laws that they have sworn to uphold. In these rare occasions, the officers face the same system of justice as anyone else. However, these few officers and the publicity of their wrongful acts should never overshadow nor demean the good name and service of the majority of police officers who serve and protect us daily. We, as a country, are lucky to have almost 700,000 people willing to take risks and endure the criticism and stress of being law enforcement officers.

As the Department of Justice implements its "Community Policing Initiative," please feel free to offer your suggestions for improvement. Most importantly, please continue to support law enforcement officers and appreciate the sacrifice and service they make every day to ensure safer communities for everyone.

Isabel Lopez, 30, Popular Spring Road Loudon, was charged with Domestic Assault.

Deputy Charlie Parker LCSO,, responded to Poplar Springs Road on an aggravated domestic violence call. A party had been thrown at the residence and everyone was intoxicated, according to dispatch. Upon arrival, contact was made with victim who did appear to be very nervous and shaken up. Victim advised that her husband, Isabel Lopez, had argued with her over who she was dancing with. Isabel then grabbed her by the neck, a visible red mark was observed, and stretched her shirt collar out. Isabel also broke a beer bottle on her right thigh; a broken beer bottle was observed in the living room floor. Isabel then advised victim that he was going to kill her. He then got his .22 rifle from the bedroom and pointed it at himself, saying he was going to kill himself. Victim did advise exactly where the firearm was located; which was hanging on a peg beside the bed and later located by law enforcement. This was all according to verbal statement given by victim and physical evidence that was observed. Contact was then made with Isabel Lopez. Isabel stated that victim had been arguing with him and leaves on a regular basis. He did advise that he had broken a beer bottle during the nights argument. Isabel maintained that there had been nothing physical between him and his wife. Due to physical evidence and correlating victim statement; Isabel Lopez was determined to be the primary aggressor. He was then taken into custody and transported to the Loudon County Jail. This did occur in Loudon County, Tn. Deputy Charlie Parker I.CSO, made the arrest.

rulo by e-mail to place orders; they followed up by mailing him cash or prepaid money cards. He then packaged his products and, using a fictitious name and return address, took his parcels to the local U.S. post office.

But his plan was not as foolproof as he thought: As a result of investigative tips, USPIS and CPB eventually seized several of Macchiarulo's incoming and outgoing packages and, through testing, identified their primary contents as anabolic steroids.

Investigators from the FBI Richmond Field Office and the USPIS, after conducting surveillances of Macchiarulo and undertaking other investigative measures, had enough to obtain a search warrant for his home in September 2014.

Once inside, they found a treasure trove of evidence—thousands of tablets, pills, and liquid ampules containing anabolic steroids; equipment used in the manufacture of finished anabolic steroid products; printed copies of e-mails containing order and payment information from Macchiarulo's customers; envelopes and packages used to send the steroids; and more than $100,000 in cash, some from the proceeds of the business.

Macchiarulo later surrendered to the government an additional $57,000 in criminal proceeds.

As a result of this multi-agency effort, law enforcement successfully shut down an operation that made a potentially dangerous substance available—without restriction—to anyone willing to pay for it.

Ms. Ward was also issued a citation for speeding. This did occur in Loudon County TN. Deputy Kenneth Palmer LCSO, made the arrest.
