without the knowledge or authorization of the board. After admitting to taking the money, Ms. Lowery deposited $10,830 into the band booster club bank account.

In August 2015, the Jefferson County Grand Jury indicted Kathleen Lowery on one count of theft over $10,000.

"It's important for all school support organizations to implement some basic financial safeguards to prevent the theft of money," said Comptroller Justin P. Wilson. "Checks and balances, such as requiring two signatures on checks, and separating money handling responsibilities, can help detect fraud."

unit for a bus, St. Louis Cardinals baseball tickets and jewelry. Mr. Jordan valued these goods between $35,000 and $40,000.

Investigators found that Mr. Jordan falsified bids and quotes, created fake invoices, and forged a signature in an effort to steer school business to his former private sector employer.

The investigation also revealed that Mr. Jordan stole at least $5,923 by falsifying an invoice from ICS. Mr. Jordan also misappropriated $5,451 by keeping seven school computers and other supplies at his home.

Mr. Jordan admitted to investigators that he received kickbacks, falsified bids and invoices, used school equipment and supplies to perform work on his personal business during school hours, and stole from the Crockett County School Department. This resulted in questioned costs totaling $1,089,820 from E-Rate funding, and other computer technology purchases made by the school department totaling $372,455.

Ashley Jordan resigned from the School Department on July 23, 2014. He was indicted by the Crockett County Grand Jury on July 20, 2015 on charges of theft over $10,000, tampering with evidence, and official misconduct.

“Our investigators identified that Mr. Jordan was able to make purchases without following proper school procedures,” said Comptroller Justin P. Wilson. “Our auditors also reported purchasing deficiencies in the Crockett County School Department in 2011, 2013, and 2014. School leaders must take steps to ensure compliance.”
