Does Having a Salad Help in Weight Management?

As a weight management strategy, most nutrition experts agree that along with regular physical activity, people should keep tabs on their portion sizes to help them manage the number of calories they consume.

Researchers from The Pennsylvania State University recently examined whether eating a salad as a first course had any effect on intake of the main meal.

The results of the study of 42 women showed eating a large salad (3 cups), compared with not having a first course, reduced the women's meal energy intake by 12 percent. The researchers concluded: "Consuming a large portion of a low-energy-dense food at the start of a meal may be an effective strategy for weight management."

In addition to calorie control, three cups of salad provide at least three servings of vegetables. Salads can help make it easy for people to reach the recommended goal of three to five servings of vegetables per day.

Assistance

was approved by Congress last week in anticipation of higher heating fuel costs during the upcoming season. The benefits will be made available through the 19 local community agencies that administer LIHEAP funds. The funds are specifically earmarked for winter heating bills.

"Despite record high summer temperatures, it's already time to plan for cold winter months," said DHS Commissioner

Gina Lodge. "Staying warm isn't easy for a lot of Tennesseans, because many simply can't afford the high cost of heating their homes. These additional LIHEAP dollars will go a long way toward keeping some of the state's most vulnerable individuals warm and safe during the upcoming winter season."

LIHEAP is 100% federally funded through a grant from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. Eligibility for LIHEAP benefits is based on established federal poverty guidelines, and documentation of household income is required. Tennesseans whose household income does not exceed 125 percent of federal poverty guidelines (that's $25,000/year for a family of four) are potentially eligible for the program. The assistance does not go directly to the client. Instead, it is made in the form of a payment to the utility company or home energy provider. If eligible, the client could receive up to two payments a year.

More than 60,000 Tennessee families are assisted each year through the LIHEAP program.
