Gus

might be done, she seems to be slipping under the weights of the race. I wonder if she would be interested in the VP job? I don't think she would go for that though.

The fellow with the styled hair seems to be doing better than the media thought. Yep, Edwards is rubbing elbows with the top again; think he has his eye on the VP job, but will the offer come to the blood sucking lawyer?

Well, as for the Republicans, don't have a clue. To be honest, they all look like Knox County Commissioners, a bunch of used car salesmen with that little smirk.

See, this is the part that gets me; the presidential race is a bit like walking into the Detroit auto show: when the doors open your eyes are gleaming with all the lights, colors and wonderful new cars.

But this year's race is a lot like venturing down to Hatmaker's Junk Yard; nothing there but a bunch of old rust buckets.
