and the driver was bleeding really badly from his face. The manager advised the truck was parked at a site.

The deputy arrived at the campsite and parked was a 2003 Chevy pickup. The truck had severe front and side damage. Inside the vehicle was a case of beer and an open bottle with blood on it in the floorboard.

The deputy knocked on the camper door and made contact with Shawn Patrick Risk. Shawn had cuts on his face, arms and hands caused by the accident. The deputy could smell a strong odor of an alcoholic beverage on his person and Risk could barely stand up.

The deputy asked Shawn if he was alright, he said he was fine. The deputy asked what happened and Shawn stated he wrecked his truck and the window busted out and cut him. The deputy asked Shawn if he had been drinking and he stated he had been drinking all day.

After taking one test Shawn told the deputy to take him to jail. A check of Shawn's ID showed him to be eligible for his license but he had not gotten them back.

Doves

"Finding good crop

fields with doves is a starting point for setting yourself up for some good dove hunting," said Roger Applegate, TWRA Small Game Coordinator. "Look for large numbers of doves lined up on power lines near fields or watch ponds for dove flights in early morning or late afternoon. Mark your locations on a map and keep an eye on these areas the rest of the summer."

Areas that continue to hold good dove numbers by mid-August will be worth planning on for the season. Hunters are urged to check locally to find landowners of properties that have gained their interest.

Also, TWRA leased dove fields, and managed dove fields on Wildlife Management Areas, will be posted on the TWRA Web site (www.tnwildlife.org) by mid-August.

The 2008 dove season opens on Labor Day (Sept. 1).
