Community Outreach Home Run Sports Memorabilia Fraud Case Yields Unexpected Benefit for Chicago Youth Baseball Leagues

At a July 10, 2018 event organized by the FBI and the Chicago White Sox, hundreds of baseballs and bats seized during a sports memorabilia fraud case were donated to inner-city youth baseball leagues.

John Rogers was a prolific forger of sports memorabilia who fleeced banks and individual investors out of millions of dollars. And although his victims are unlikely to be repaid, Rogers' fraud has provided an unexpected benefit for a group of inner-city teen baseball players in Chicago.

Earlier this week on the city's South Side—an area known for gang violence and

Legion

In a recent meeting American Legion Post 256 once again hosted lecturer and author, Rachael Yarnell Thompson. Through her research and role as educator at the George C. Marshall home/museum site in Leesburg, Virginia she has extensive knowledge of General Marshall. The General is recognized for distinguished service in both World Wars; earned the rank of Five-Star General; and held positions as United States Chief of Staff of the Army, Secretary of State, and Secretary of Defense. He negotiated wartime strategy alongside

President Franklin D. Roosevelt Sr., and it was these inter dealings with President "FDR" that was the subject of Mrs. Thompson's detailed and interesting lecture. She described many of the behind the scenes situations which described

General Marshall's influence as FDR's counsel during the planning and execution of World War II and most notably of the Normandy Invasion see legion ctd p.3

Rock

Joseph Enlow, 52, Homeless, was charged with Aggravated Assault.

Deputy Craig Brewer LCSO, was on Highway 321 North Lenoir City Tennessee in front of the Kentucky Fried Chicken where he observed a white male throwing rocks at vehicles and a motorcycle rider that went by.

Then while walking out in traffic he started spitting on cars and giving obscene gestures at motorist. When Deputy activated my emergency equipment to get across the roadway the male turned and started to run to avoid him but could not for the wall there. He then picked up a large rock, surge rock, turned and started towards Deputy with it over his head as if going to assault him causing Deputy to have to draw his weapon to make him stop and put it down.

This did happen in Loudon County Tennessee.

homicides—Special Agent Brian Brusokas and nearly 20 other FBI employees from the Bureau's Chicago Division delivered 125 Louisville Slugger bats and dozens of baseballs to young players whose leagues are sponsored by the Chicago White Sox organization.

The equipment was seized during the Rogers fraud case, and after the forged signatures of Mickey Mantle, Babe Ruth, Albert Pujols, and other famous players were chemically removed or blacked out, the bats and balls found a new home among youngsters who have embraced baseball as a way to stay out of trouble and to possibly earn a college scholarship.

"These kids are doing the right thing and trying to live the right path in life," said Brusokas, who led the Rogers investigation as part of the FBI's Art Crime Team. "We wanted to give them something that they needed."

"If we took one of these bats and put it in the hands of one of these kids," said Jeffrey Sallet, special agent in charge of the Chicago Division, "could that bat make a difference for that kid?"

Sallet, who was on hand for the equipment donation and spoke to the players and coaches, explained that engaging with the community is fundamental to the FBI's mission and to its success as an organization.

"These kids are doing the right thing and trying to live the right path in life. We wanted to give them something that they needed."

Brian Brusokas, special agent, FBI Chicago

"We as the FBI earn the American people's trust every single day," he said. "The best way for us to keep that trust is to be out there showing everybody that we are human beings, that we are part of the community."

"We are very thankful for the donation they gave us," said Kenny Fullman, who manages the White Sox Amateur City Elite (ACE) program. "And we are thankful to all the agents who came out today to spend time with our kids, to play catch with them, and talk with our kids. Any time we can get someone to come out and be positive around our kids and talk to them about their careers, we are very thankful for that."

The ACE program—and a similar Major League Baseball initiative, Reviving Baseball in Inner Cities (RBI)—aims to keep Chicago teens away from gangs and, through baseball, offer them skills and opportunities to help them succeed on and off the field. "We use baseball as a stepping stone to further their education," Fullman said, "so they will be successful people in the future."

The equipment had been seized during a sports memorabilia fraud case.

"Our ACE kids have to perform academically and athletically," noted Anthony Olivo, manager of youth baseball initiatives for the White Sox. "We offer a safe environment to get them off the streets and on a narrow path and provide them an opportunity they might otherwise never have."

The program has been successful. Since it began in 2007, ACE participants have received nearly 170 college scholarships—nearly 70 of them at the Division 1 level, Olivo said. And 24 players have been chosen in the Major League Baseball draft.

eral Richard E. Zuckerman of the Justice Department's Tax Division. According to court documents, Brian Leo Snow failed to pay his federal tax liabilities for the years 2000 - 2008 and then became the subject of collection activity by the Internal Revenue Service (IRS). After being held in contempt of court for failing to provide documents and records to the IRS, Snow filed false retaliatory liens claiming that various government officials, including an IRS revenue officer, an Assistant United States Attorney, and a United States District Court Judge for the Eastern District of Tennessee owed him millions of dollars. Each of these government officials had been involved in attempts to collect Snow's back taxes. Snow also filed three false claims with the IRS claiming over $144 million in tax refunds to which he was not entitled. Snow owes the IRS over $150,000 in taxes. Sentencing is scheduled for November 28, 2018.

Snow faces a statutory maximum sentence of fifteen years in prison. He also faces a term of supervised release, restitution, and monetary penalties.

Principal Deputy Assistant Attorney General Zuckerman commended special agents of the offices of Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration and IRS

Criminal Investigation, who conducted the investigation, and Tax Division Senior Litigation Counsel Jen E. Ihlo and Trial Attorney Jason M. Scheff, who are prosecuting the case.
