Laser Striker Sentenced Florida Man Among Many Prosecuted for Aiming Laser Pointer at Aircraft

Laser pointers can light your path or entertain your cat, but pointing a laser at an aircraft is dangerous and illegal. And a Florida man who pointed a laser at a police helicopter is now serving a prison sentence thanks to an investigation by the FBI and local law enforcement.

During an armed standoff in a Pasco County, Florida, neighborhood on December 5, 2017, the sheriff's office called for a helicopter to assist deputies. As the helicopter hovered overhead, Ryan Fluke, 28, re-

The United States Drug Enforcement Administration this week announced the conclusion of Operation Crystal Mountain, a sweeping enforcement action spanning three states. DEA special agents, working closely with their state and local counterparts throughout Kentucky, Tennessee, and West Virginia targeted Mexican drug cartels, drug trafficking organizations and other individuals involved in the manufacturing and distribution of methamphetamine. More than 800 pounds of methamphetamine were interdicted or seized during the operation.

“Everyone has a right to live in safety. The amount of drugs and weapons we’ve taken off the street with this operation, along with the number of drug dealers that we’ve locked up, represents a small victory in our on-going fight for safer communities for us all,” D. Christopher Evans, Special Agent in Charge of DEA’s Louisville Division Office said. “While America’s opioid crisis may dominate headlines, Operation Crystal Mountain should serve as a reminder that methamphetamine is a problem that has never gone away. The dedicated men and women of DEA, working closely with state and local law enforcement, are relentpeatedly aimed a laser pointer at the helicopter, momentarily disorienting the pilot.

The pilot recovered his vision, but had he not, the results could have been disastrous. While airborne, though, the pilot had been able to determine the house where the laser beam originated, and, after landing, went to the residence. Fluke, who was at the house and matched the description of the man captured on the helicopter's video surveillance recordings, was arrested.

When confronted by law enforcement, Fluke apologized. "He said he didn't know it was so bright," said FBI Special Agent Katie Hill, who worked the case out of the FBI's Tampa Field Office.

In November 2018, Fluke pleaded guilty to aiming a laser at a police helicopter;

he was sentenced in March 2019 to 21 months in federal prison.

While pointing a laser at a helicopter or plane may seem harmless, the opposite is true. It's dangerous—both to those in the air and on the ground—and it's a federal crime.

"It's very risky to point lasers at aircraft," Hill said. "Whether it's a helicopter or a large commercial airliner, it's very dangerous. It's especially dangerous on take-off and landing, which are critical times of the flight."

The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) tracks these incidents and received 6,754 reports of laser strikes in 2017—a 250 percent increase since the FAA first started tracking laser incidents in 2010.

less in their efforts to rid our neighborhoods of dangerous drugs and bring to justice those who distribute them, wherever they may be."

"The Eastern District of Tennessee continues to support and work with our law enforcement partners to combat the meth scourge in our region," said U.S. Attorney J. Douglas Overbey. "It is only with our combined efforts that we can effectively fight this menace that continues to destroy the lives and families of our citizens."

Operation Crystal Mountain is the culmination of several investigations that began earlier this year. Since January, DEA special agents from the Louisville Field Division, with support from state and local law enforcement agencies across the region, have arrested 235 individuals on federal drug-related charges and seized more than $800,000.00 in cash and 52 firearms, as well as significant quantities of heroin, fentanyl, and other drugs. During this same timeframe, DEA assisted its state and local counterparts with the arrest of 140 additional offenders on state-level drug charges.

While the opioid epidemic has ravaged the nation, several large swaths of the U.S. see meth as their primary drug threat. The majority of the methamphetamine in the U.S. is produced in Mexico and trafficked by Mexican DTOs. However, DEA continues to work to disrupt and dismantle all components of both foreign and domestic organizations which produce and traffic methamphetamine.
